This work would not have begun were it not for Nels Soiseth, who asked me to collate his notes into a readable form. "And make it interesting," he added. Fortunately, Nels had kept an incredible amount of material over the years, searched for and found most of what he was missing, and put most of it in chronological order. When the written record failed, his remarkable memory was able to flesh out details that would otherwise have been lost. While not the writer, Nels could properly be considered the author of what lies between these pages.

Both Nels and I are grateful for the help and encouragement we received from several former contractors and members of ECA. Among them was Marshall Young, who wrote a good number of pages, explaining issues, clarifying the emotions of the time and "drawing pictures" of some of the leaders of the Electrical Contractors Association. The reader will gather that Mr. Young, the first President of the ECA, is a remarkable man. His input makes this a better book.

We want to thank both Ted Stimpson and Norm Baker for taking the time to write us to clarify certain matters, and Bob Conacher for meeting with us to share his insights and notes with regard to the apprenticeship and training program. To him and to Neil Soiseth, we extend our appreciation for their careful and patient editing of the draft document.

Special thanks go, too, to Peter Suderman and Stan Murkett for the cordial treatment we received when we met with them at Pete's office in Regina to glean everything we could from their still-brilliant memories. Finally, we would be remiss if we were not to thank our wives - Mrs. Soiseth for putting up with boxes of dusty records for decades and my wife, Phyllis, for accepting that a writer is a strange beast that lurks in the basement, often oblivious to family and social life.
